As the first of the 110 national committees of ICOMOS, US/ICOMOS has sustained a proud tradition of global leadership for more than fifty years. To continue that tradition, we have organized Forward Together: A Culture-Nature Journey Towards More Effective Conservation in a Changing World, our 2018 Symposium, as a search for solutions and a forum for inspiration.

Nature and culture, the dual themes of the World Heritage List and this gathering, appear more entwined—and more fraught—than at any earlier point in the history of the preservation movement. These are just a few pressing concerns at World Heritage sites in the United States as we write this: at Grand Canyon National Park (inscribed 1979), proposed developments infringe upon sacred places and nearby uranium mining poses serious threats to the health of Native Americans; and, near Chaco Culture National Historical Park (inscribed 1987), the U.S. government appears committed to proceeding with the sale of oil and gas drilling permits in previously protected lands.

Preservationists have come to realize that all historic sites have both natural and cultural resources and all are subject to natural processes and cultural practices. We now also see that culture is tenacious, not something that can be relegated to the past. Indigenous heritage provides a special and effective link to nature: special because making visitors aware of it enhances their experience; effective because indigenous heritage groups can be powerful allies in the protection of natural resources. Working together with indigenous heritage groups is not only an ethical imperative but can mobilize public support to fend off development that impairs or destroys natural resources.

A “culture-nature” approach to conservation requires that we look at where these resources and practices meet to identify challenges as well as the solutions that create sustainable management. We are honored that you have joined us as we bring experts from over 15 countries together to share the latest international Culture/Nature theory, practices and techniques. We encourage you to listen, learn and contribute to fruitful discussions that will move culture and nature Forward Together.

We thank our hosts, sponsors, esteemed panelists, and the many speakers and attendees who have traveled so far to join us. We also acknowledge and are grateful for the countless hours that Nora Mitchell and Jessica Brown, Program Committee Co-Chairs, have devoted to making Forward Together a success, along with the many hours contributed by all of our Program and Planning Committee members.

Sincerely,

Douglas C. Comer
